

From: Bryan thurnau
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 11/21/01 11:53am
Subject: Not stiff enough penalty

To Whom it May Concern,

I feel that the terms of the Microsoft agreement are not harsh enough. It might also turn out to be beneficial to the company. Currently one of their competitors has the largest share of the education market (Apple Computers) and if Microsoft is allowed to put up to a billion dollars worth of hardware, software and training then this may severely hurt Apple. These terms should be reconsidered and only allow the company to give one billion in cash for computer purchases. If the schools decided to choose a wintel based system then good for Microsoft.

As you can see if Microsoft is allowed to go ahead with the agreed upon terms then they are just using their corporate muscle against another competitor. Please consider this and any other similar issue when deciding the fate of Microsoft.

Thank you
Bryan Thurnau

--